INTRODUCTION

This report describes eight word lists for use as part of an automated publishing system for technical information. The lists were developed under sponsorship of the Naval Technical Information Presentation Program (NTIPP), which has been designated as the focal point for research and development in DOD's project to automate the production of technical information (TI).

BACKGROUND

DOD policy requires accurate, current, and comprehensible technical information (TI) to carry out a variety of functions supporting DOD weapons systems and equipment. Traditional techniques for procuring, generating, storing, reproducing, distributing, and controlling TI within DOD have had many problems, including high cost. Therefore, the Navy (as well as the other services) has been developing and applying new information processing technology to the TI life cycle converting from a primarily paper environment to a digital or electronic environment. Application of this new technology is lowering costs and improving quality.

The increased use of automated publishing systems has served as an impetus in the Navy's program to improve technical information. Typically, an automated publishing system configuration consists of:

- word processing stations for text authoring and editing
- computer-assisted design (CAD) equipment for creating graphics such as flowcharts or logic diagrams
- capability to merge graphics and text into a unified digital database
- networking of work stations
- equipment to produce camera-ready copy including both text and graphics.

In 1978 the Training Analysis and Evaluation Group (TAEG) was tasked (CNET Code N-5 letter of 29 June 1978) to develop an editing system to augment the word processing component of automated publishing systems by providing specific aid to authors in making Navy technical materials. Designated the "Computer Readability Editing System" (CRES) and published as TAEG Technical Report 83<sup>1</sup> (Kincaid, Aagard, and O'Hara, 1980), this system provided aid to writers by:

- flagging uncommon words (those not on word lists)

<sup>1</sup>Additional references for information on CRES are listed in Bibliography to this report. Also, a guide for writers and editors is currently in preparation.

Technical Report 164

- flagging awkward or long sentences
- suggesting simpler replacements for difficult words and phrases
- keeping track of a variety of specialized words (such as acronyms, equipment nomenclature, abbreviations, and mandatory technical words).

As these features indicate, much of the value of CRES results from controlling the vocabulary of technical information.<sup>2</sup> This requires the use of word lists designed to match the vocabulary of the Navy personnel who must use technical information to do their jobs.

The current version of CRES runs on the WANG VS 100 mainframe computer and is being used for producing technical documents by a number of Navy contractors. It contains the original features (Kincaid, et al., 1980) and has additional capability for large scale production work.

PURPOSE

One of the specific goals of NTIPP is to increase comprehensibility of TI. The eight word lists in this report were developed to help achieve this by simplifying vocabulary.

The first is a revision of the common word list originally developed with CRES.<sup>3</sup> It represents the core vocabulary of junior Navy enlisted personnel. The other seven lists are comprised of technical words.

ORGANIZATION OF THIS REPORT

In addition to the introduction, this report contains sections explaining how the technical word lists were developed and the intended use of these word lists.

The eight word lists are included as appendices as follows:

Appendix A. CRES Common Word List consisting of 4,179 root words with a total of 11,062 words (a revision of the original CRES common word list published in TAEG Technical Report 83, 1980).

Appendix B. General Electronics Word List consisting of 359 root words and 669 words in all.

Appendix C. Propulsion Engineering Word List consisting of 443 root words and 885 words in all.

<sup>2</sup>Additionally, CRES provides the readability grade level according to the Department of Defense readability specification contained in MIL-M-38784B. Contracts procuring technical manuals frequently specify readability grade level.

Technical Report 164

Appendix D. Administration and Clerical Word List consisting of 291 root words and 607 words in all.

Appendix E. Communications and Navigation Word List consisting of 413 root words and 770 words in all.

Appendix F. Weapon Systems Control Word List consisting of 375 root words and 885 words in all.

Appendix G. Ships' Mechanical and Electrical Word List consisting of 471 root words and 919 words in all.

Appendix H. Aircraft Equipment Word List consisting of 189 root words and 367 words in all.

Technical Report 164

DEVELOPMENT OF TECHNICAL WORD LISTS

The technical word lists were developed in an iterative process involving the following steps:

1. Topics of the seven technical word lists were chosen to correspond to:

- major occupational groupings in the Navy
- the majority of technical manuals procured by the Navy.

2. Initial versions of the seven lists were compiled from the following three sources:

- The most frequently occurring words in a standard Naval Sea Command reference (NAVSEA S9086, Naval Ships' Technical Manual). This was determined by a computer frequency analysis. A 100,000 word sample of text was selected from appropriate chapters to correspond to the topics of the seven technical word lists. Words occurring at least twice were selected for the original lists.
- Defense Language Institute glossaries.
- other appropriate glossaries.

3. Each list was compared against text taken from 75 NAVSEA manuals. About 2,000 words of text from each manual were entered into one of seven word processing files (corresponding to the appropriate word list). Frequently occurring words not on the original common word list or the initial version of the technical word list were added to that list.

4. Project team members reviewed each list and determined whether to add or delete words. A number of additional unpublished word lists became available and these were considered in the revision. These word lists were from two sources:

- Glossaries from Navy technical schools and
- Navy contractor technical documentation departments.

5. Outside reviewers from Government agencies and Navy contractor technical documentation groups provided feedback. Technical writers, subject matter experts, and managers responsible for development of technical documentation served as reviewers.

6. The technical word lists were compared to determine which technical words appeared on a majority of the technical word lists. These words were considered common words for Navy personnel.

Technical Report 164

7. Project team members edited the technical and common word lists for spelling, part of speech, and relevance of each word to the topic of the particular list.

USE OF THE LISTS

The word lists contained in this document are for use by the Navy and its contractors in the preparation of technical information. Other military services may find the lists similarly useful.

The technical word lists will need periodic revision to reflect changes in technology. It is recommended that the NTIPP office establish a mechanism to do this. Probably the best way is for users to suggest changes. Users will most likely keep files of words in their documents identified as uncommon for several reasons:

- so that equipment nomenclature is not flagged as uncommon
- to create special glossaries, such as acronyms, abbreviations, and mandatory technical words, all of which should be defined (see figure 1 for an example)
- to document use of words not on lists in specifications provided by contract.

Navy contractors (e.g., Rockwell International) are reporting that it takes several months of using the original common word list (Kincaid, et al., 1980) to create special lists so that common technical words are not flagged. To date, CRES has been the vehicle used to check text against the common word list. However, in addition to CRES the lists contained in this report can be used with other computer programs; e.g., to check spelling.
